DyNaMiC PrOxY Product Key is a small-sized and portable piece of kit which enables users to easily modify the proxy configuration of their operating system. It downloads a list of proxies from the Internet and makes room for configuration. This type of software can be used to access otherwise unavailable online content which depends on the user's geographical location. Portability advantages Since there is no setup pack involved, you can drop the executable file in a custom directory on the disk and just click it to run, as well as save it to a removable storage unit (like a pen drive) to launch it on any PC with minimum effort and no previous installers. Just keep in mind that the device should not be write-protected, since DyNaMiC PrOxY automatically creates a configuration file at startup and saves it in the same location. However, users can rest assured that the app will not make any modifications to the Windows registry, as it typically happens with some installers. In order to remove the tool, it is simply necessary to delete the executable and configuration files. User-friendly interface with intuitive settings The GUI is made of a regular window with a plain and simple structure which shows hotkeys for changing the proxy, pausing and exiting. As far as its configuration is concerned, users may specify a proxy timeout, open an additional list with proxies from the computer, enable repeat mode, as well as analyze all downloaded proxies and sync with HMA. Q: iOS: Publishing an application - App Store vs. TestFlight Build Numbers If I built and tested my app on iTunes TestFlight and now want to release it to iOS devices and iTunes App Store, how can I tell what Build Number to give the next time I submit to the App Store? I tried using the release profile but the build numbers in Xcode are zero! The part I find weird is that Xcode gives me the right path to my.ipa file, so the apps work perfectly but if I send them out to a friend's phone and click "Update", it still says 100000! Is there a way to tell Xcode what build number
